Structure of the New Courses

The new SDM training Tree - exemplifying how the new training is progressed. The motif of a tree was a starting point for creating the new course. The roots symbolise the variety of experiences participants bring to the training programme. The trunk symbolises the core knowledge, skills, understanding and experience all SDM practitioners should have. The branches symbolise how the knowledge base can be developed in specific and specialised settings, e.g., learning to become a course leader, research, special populations such as the elderly, people with dementia, autism, attachment, trauma etc.

12 three-hour sessions complete the initial training.

Sessions 5 & 6 are based on developing the course participants knowledge of the theory behind planning. The sessions give the participants opportunities to plan a session and a series of sessions, using ongoing evaluations.

Participants need to have been trained to session 4 or to have been trained to the previous 'level 1' ability.

The end of session 6 is a formal exit point and participants will become SDM Practitioners and will receive a certificate.
